Good Winter Morning,

Kristen pointed out that with our library redesign, we need to change our lockdown spot, since the sightlines have changed. Chris took a look at this and we think the best location for students is in the space by the row of computers that are in front of my cubby and the sink area.

If we happen to have a library and a computer class in there at the same time, students could also be in the center space of the lab if need be. For that space, they should begin sitting in line with the book shelf that is closest to the SMART board (NOT all the way up against that wall, since you can see that space where the book shelf is not).

I will be glad to show you these spots the next time you are up here for lab or library, or better yet, peek through the windows at both doors so you can see for yourself.

Think spring,
Rob
